Commute Burden Index
An overall score for the burden of the daily morning commute, combining the Rush Commute Index and the Ride Load Score.

Rush Commute Index
Our own index that turns commuting strain into a number, based on congestion rates published by Japan's MLIT.

Ride Load Score
A score that reflects the length of time on the train and the burden of transfers.

Average Ride Time
The average time spent on trains, calculated from the addresses entered.

Average Commute Time
The average time from home to the workplace, including transfers and the walk to the station.

Compare up to 5 sites

Compare sites by each indicator.

Using the same employee data and arrival time, see how commute burden differs from site to site, backed by data.

Add "ease of commuting" to your criteria for choosing an office.

A basis for relocation decisions
Put "ease of commuting," long judged by feel, into numbers alongside rent, space and location.

Explaining the choice internally
Explain "why here" with figures and a map, for smoother consensus with management and staff.

Comparing sites and staggered hours
Filter the input data to see how things change if some departments adopt staggered hours.
